Sweden, Paris, Florence, Italy, Berlin, Warsaw — their names are famous and glamorous as they have photographed the most famous people of the 20th century. Their photographs are not just photographs, they are art. As Harrison writes in this, the first of two volumes, "Fashion photography is not just about the product, but about the message, and — above all — about the artist."

In tracing the history of fashion photography, the author provides a comprehensive overview of the great photographers of the genre, from the early days of Alexander Liberman and David LaChapelle to the present. He provides a detailed look at the work of the most important photographers of the 20th century, including the names of the most prominent ones: Richard Avedon, Helmut Newton, and Deborah Turbeville, and alongside the names of the most prominent ones: Richard Avedon, Helmut Newton, and Deborah Turbeville.

The book continues to explore the work of the most prominent photographers of the 20th century, including the names of the most prominent ones: Richard Avedon, Helmut Newton, and Deborah Turbeville.
